International Labour Organization (ILO) suggests poverty as the greatest single cause behind child labour – For impoverished households, income from a child's work is usually crucial for his or her own survival or for that of the household. Income from working children, even if small, may be between 25% and 40% of the household income. Lack of meaningful alternatives, such as affordable schools and quality education, according to ILO is another major factor driving children into harmful labour. Children work because they have nothing better to do. Many communities, particularly rural areas where between 60 – 70% of child labour is prevalent, do not possess adequate school facilities. Even when schools are sometimes available, they are too far away, difficult to reach, unaffordable or the quality of education is so poor that parents wonder if going to school is really worth it. Non-governmental organizations play a significant role in identifying such people and educating the parents on the importance of education and how it will bring positive changes in the lives of their children.
